Boxing Results

Main event—Jock Malone won decisively over Young Fitzsimmons in 12-round bout. Semi-windup, for Oklahoma heavyweight title—Jack Hurley knocked out Cliff Clarke in second round.

By E. A. BRIDGEWATER.

The dazzling speed and remarkable endurance of Jock Malone, the St. Paul middleweight championship contender, proved entirely too much for Young Fitzsimmons of Oklahoma City and Malone won all the way in their 12-round bout at the Convention hall last night. Malone jabbed and punched Fitz's anatomy from the waist up in every minute of every round, and ducked and dodged and shifted with such skill and speed that the Oklahoman rarely could find him. Though the crowd naturally was anxious for the home state youngster to win, no voice of protest was heard when Referee Gus Graham halted Malone's hand awarding him the decision as the bout ended the twelfth round.

It was just a good boxer against a much better one. It was not a great work that let Malone win, but Jock's decidedly brilliant work.

No Stain on Fitz's Record.

Being decisively beaten by Malone, however, is not stain at all on the Oklahoma City youngster's record, for his conqueror probably cannot be whipped by any middleweight in the game today, with the possible exception of Mike Gibbons, his old mentor and fellow Minnesotan. As a matter of fact, Fitz is to be congratulated upon showing as well as he did against an opponent of Malone's caliber.

Only one thing marred Fitz's performance, an inclination to hang on in the last two or three rounds. This, too, after he had made his best showing in the eighth, ninth and tenth.

A Good Lesson for Fitz.

Nate Jackson, former bantam champion of the southwest and now manager of Young Fitz, accepted the defeat of his protege at the hands of Malone with a smile. "Malone's just too smart—too much experience for Fitz," said Nate. "It's a great lesson for him. He has been handicapped by having no one to work with who could teach him anything. Myself—I'm too little. There's no one at Oklahoma City to give him any pointers. But watch him in his next fight. He'll spring a lot of this clever stuff Malone used on him. He'll be a much improved boxer as a result of the licking he got tonight. Why, if you noticed it, he even showed improvement in the late rounds with Malone. He's mighty quick to pick up anything."

Nate had it right. Fitz did show better in the later innings.

After losing the first two holding Malone even in the third he was boxed off his feet up to the tenth. He stepped countless blows with body and head, and fared even worse in the infighting than at the long range boxing. Malone gave a great exhibition of cleverness. He would jab and then drive his left to the stomach, or head, almost at will. And Fitz couldn't seem to touch him.

Fitz distressed in last round.

Fitz finally tired a little better in the ninth. He got in some left jabs and opened up more than at any other stage. It was an even round. He also had his moments of infighting. But in the eleventh Malone renewed the offensive and won it by a good margin.

The twelfth round was the only one in which Fitz seemed in distress. Malone's lightning-like attack seemed to tell on him, and he retreated himself with hanging on at every opportunity, with Malone going after him like a tiger.

A telegram was read just before the main event started announcing that Kid Palmer, formerly of St. Paul but now of Tulsa, challenged the winner. No date was set, but the match will be in the near future. Palmer is in New Orleans where he is booked to fight Battling Greer.

Hurley Kaysos Cliff Clarke.

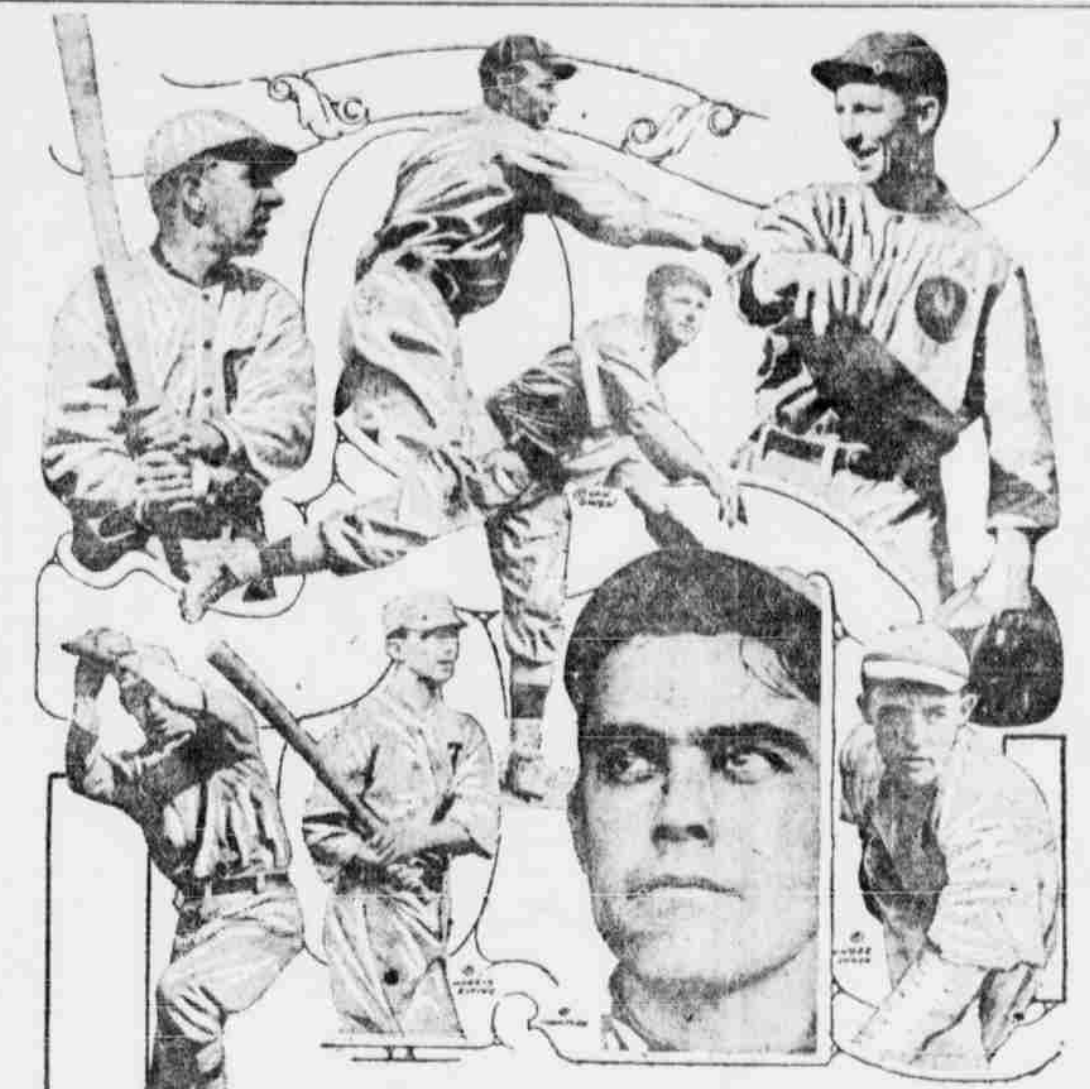

In the semi-windup Jack Hurley of Shawnee won the right to claim the lightweight championship of Oklahoma by knocking out Cliff Clarke of Muskogee in the second round of a scheduled 10-round bout. This was a terrific battle while it lasted, the first round being a hair-raising slugfest that brought prolonged cheering from the crowd, and the second being just a continuation of it until Hurley lifted right up and sent him down for the count with an overhead right that caught him off his feet. Up to the knockout Clarke probably had a shade the better of the fight, though both boys had battled well and hard and each landed many good blows.

Hurley Went After Him.

Fast at the onset, Hurley agreed that the Hurley-Clarke bout was as brimful of action as any they had ever seen while it lasted. The pace set by the boys was actually killing. It's a fact they couldn't have kept it up long. Apparently a knockout was uppermost in the mind of each, the two boys throwing themselves into the battle with utter abandon.

The only criticism we ever had to make of Hurley was that he took the fight too easy, didn't seem to be certainly showing enough in the offensive line last night—and the re-

Who Will Be 1921 World Series Star, Babe Ruth or an Unsung, Unknown Hero?

Left to right, above: Eddie Collins, star of 1913 for Athletics against Giants; Stanley Coveleskie of Indians, who beat Dodgers three times in 1920; and Hank Gowdy, whose brave hit helped beat Athletics four straight in 1911. Center, Christy Mathewson, who held Athletics runless in three games in 1905. Below: Jack Coombs, who subdued Cubs in 1916; Frank Baker, home run king in 1911 games; Babe Adams, who beat Tigers three times in 1909 series; and Dutch Reuther, who pitched his first world's series game, beat White Sox in 1910.

By NORMAN E. BROWN.

The well known E. Ickle Pate is going to shut his eyes, count one, meeny, miny, mo within the next few days and draw from the roster of the New York Giants or New York Yankees another hero for the two line-ups.

Every world's series produces at least one such hero. And that favored one doesn't always come from the list of recognized stars in the two line-ups.

No one, compiling a list of possible heroes in the 1921 series has forehand, would have named Hank Gowdy to outshine all the others.

Gowdy was a steady, conscientious player and a good batter—and a new chap. But no one suspected that he would play the main part in slugging the Braves to victory in four straight games against the famous Athletic megastar with his great squad of hitters.

And here are some of the other birds that climbed onto pedestals in world's series of other years.

Christy Mathewson in the 1905 series with his wonderful shutout hurling.

The unknown George Roche in the 1908 series for the White Sox. (And the next year they sent him to the minors.)

Harry Steinfield was the batting and fielding star in 1907.

Frank Chance shone in the 1908 series for the Cubs.

Babe Adams beat the Tigers three times the next fall.

Jack Coombs was the big star of the 1910 series.

Frank Baker pulled the Babe Ruth stunt in 1911.

Buck Herzog in 1912. Eddie Collins in 1913. Duffy Lewis in 1915.

Harry Hooper in 1916 joined the list.

Then in 1917 Urban Faber thrilled the White Sox fans and baseball generally by facing the Giant maulers and Jose McGraw's brains in three games and turning the entire New York outfit back each time.

Faber's hurling ranged among the masterful bits of pitching in history. The fact that many across the Giants of playing dumbbell baseball in that series ought not detract from Faber's glory.

It was the snappy batting of Whitman, unassuming Red Sox gent, that helped humble the Cubs in 1919.

We skip rapidly over the awful force of the fall of 1919, but if any man deserved credit for his showing in that series it is Dutch Reuther, who hurled great ball in the opening game for the Reds.

Last year Stanley Coveleskie won the series almost single-handed for the Indians with three victories.

We'll let the aforementioned E. Ickle Pate write the last paragraph to this recital.

SHAWNEE NEXT FOR TULSA HIGH

First Conference Game of Season to Be Played Here Friday

Tulsa High school basketball will meet strong competition for the opening conference game of the season when they decided to have the T. H. S. eleven meet Shawnee here on Friday of this week. If present indications are anything to go by.

Last year's coach Bremmensen's grinders met the Shawnee squad in a hard fought scrap which ended in a 7-4 tie, and Tulsa High had as good a team in many respects as it has now. The condition of the Shawnee squad can be gauged by noting the score of the Huddellville Shawnee game last Friday, which ended in a 7-4 tie, and Huddellville is reputed to have a fast eleven.

The Tulsa-Shawnee battle should prove to be a lively one, brimful of action. Walker, star tackle, who was put out of the Shawnee engagement the first of the season with a dislocated shoulder, but who showed some of the old line plugging on the last game, will not be allowed in the coming game unless it is absolutely necessary. Coach Bremmensen said Tuesday. Although Walker has been practicing each day for the last week, he has not participated in any other action as yet. He probably will be in shape for the second conference game of the season's schedule which will be played two weeks from Friday.

Big Stadium for Illinois.

URBANA, Ill., Oct. 4.—A three-deck arrangement of the seats, patterned after the new home of the New York American league baseball club, is the feature of the new plans of the University of Illinois Memorial stadium. This feature, eliminating curved ends and enabling all spectators to sit along the edge of the auditorium, is an innovation in stadium design. The idea was advocated by Robert Zappier, football coach.
